Pandore

a fraktur, roman and italic
type family, each style
in bold, roman and light

---

Pandore is the result of an exploration around the possibilities of the blackletter, through its adaptation for typographic needs of today. It is a type family designed for editorial purposes, thanks to its wide proportions with a good readability for long text. The typeface gathers a fraktur, a roman, and an italic on a same x-height, each with three weights variants, totaling a range of nine different text colors.

These three styles have been defined from three historical models, approached through a radical and contemporary design. First a fraktur blackletter from the fraktur model, through Rudolf Koch's work (c. 1910-1920). Then a roman from the alphabet designed by Eric Gill as a guide for the sign-writers (1905). And finally an italic from the cancellaresca model, the Galliard of Robert Granjon and its reinterpretation by Mathew Carter (1978).

Pandore defines a subtle balance between the functionality required for a text typeface and an expressivity tinged with a calligraphic flavor.
